Pre-Wedding Rumors Fill Rice County

Shotgun Wedding, Green Card and Lost Bet Top Theories

(Faribault) "We are full! The closest hotel rooms are in Albert Lea," said Joanie Schroder to the never-ending barrage of calls seeking a room reservation. Ever since the media saw the public marriage license notice on the twenty-second of February, it has been nuts around here. I am not going but if there is someone out there with a plus one, I am your gal."

The nuptial buzz has continued unabated since February as friends of Joanie and Steve began hoping for the ultra-exclusive invitation to the wedding. "This is the social event of the year," whispered patriarch-in-waiting and top nephew L. William Miller, "Amy and I have been contacted by the Daily News to take some 'behind the scene' photos. We refused until the offer until it moved to a very attractive measurable amount."

The most recent news released by the couple was the secret contents of the coveted gift bags. Long rumored to include only baked goods, it has been confirmed that the gift bags will also include an autographed glamour shot of the couple, a visor from Bethlehem Academy, a 45 rpm single "Dominique" by the Singing Nun, a lucky wedding antler supplied by McMichael Taxidermy, an autographed Uncle Big porkpie hat and a random grab-bag of District One Hospital office supplies.

Free Market Thinkers Litter The Readership

(New Orleans) "I got an idea and thought 'I sure know a lot of people who are just about ready for adult diapers'," said Maggie Sears. "So I just thinking, I am just the kind of retailer to corner the market on this new and growing market segment." The initial estimates from the readership alone will top three billion dollars in 2017 and that does not even count the hats.

(St. Paul) Restaurateur John McGrory has opened up "Tiny Utensils" in North Minneapolis. "I saw that no one was serving food in tiny bowls with tiny little spoons and forks," said the innovator. "My shop allows you to cook a two ounce bowl of stew and eat it with a doll-like spoon." When told that many family members are confused with the approach, John said, "But look how big my hands are! They are tiny!"

Curt "Capicola" Breeding has started a jet salami delivery service called "Sky Meat" after he heard about the dire Italian meat shortages in the Upper Midwest. "I will fly a few feet of spicy Italian sausage anywhere I can stop this travesty. I have a few yards coming to the Chaska area in early June. I can make a difference with the poor farm folks."
