Pope Attends Cassie's Wedding

"Great to be back in Rice County"

(Catholic News Service) There was one gate-crasher at Cassie's wedding recently but there was no problems letting him into the Legion Hall. Arriving between dinner and the dancing, John Paul II came through the bar entrance and surprised his old Faribault pals and drinking buddies with an unannounced visit.

JP2 said, "Well, I go way, way back with Lorraine and Bing. And I wanted to give my old friends a big surprise. A few days ago, my posse told me that I was coming through town and once we worked it out, I felt it would be a real hoot. Besides that, Bing still owes me $100 from the '91 series."

When spotted by Lorraine, she chuckled and said, "That is so like him. In fact, he had sent back his RSVP marked 'cannot attend.' I had a feeling he was coming so I still ordered him a dinner. "The Holy Father worked the room, bought a few drinks, signed some autographs, made a toast to the new couple and even made a half-hearted attempt to convert, the town's lone Episcopalian (see above). "I don't think we are that hard-up," sighed JP2, "but one does what one has to do."

Eventually it was time to hit the road and his Holiness made a quiet exit through the bar. "He seemed like a real fun guy," said (Little) Billy Miller. "Andy Mueller and I are going to Rome this summer to hang out with him. He seems real cool and he told us that we could cruise around in his car." The newlywed couple were touched that he had stopped but were a bit surprised with the gift. "It was nice to see him," said Cassie, "but we already got like, about nine toasters. Didn't he use the gift registry?"
