Banana Bread Czar Named

Karen Ayre: "Heavy is the batter that wears the Crown "

(New York) As she left the dais, Karen Ayre waved and said, "Grandma Lenz can kiss my ass ... twice." Through a promotional tour, around the baking capitals of the world, the fortyish ex-dancer has declared herself the Czar of anything related to banana bread. "Don't give me any crap about St. Joe's or Rice County, I make the best damn banana bread and that is that."

"Her banana bread is pretty damn good," sighed Michele Lenz-Noll. "However, calling out Cathy is not a good idea. If the Miller/Sears clan thinks they can hold a grudge, they have not seen my mother in one of her moods." The baking community is almost unanimous with praise of Karen's banana bread creations. "I do not know if it is the extra vanilla, the brown sugar or the bourbon, but that chick has some mad baking skills," said food critic James "Snapper" Batchelder. Loaves of the banana bread will be made commercially available in the fall of 2018. When asked for more details, Karen paused and said, "Are you from the FDA? Back off."

Updates from the Readers...

"Things just keep on changing around here"

- John McGrory has changed his middle name from "Danielle" to "Danger." It seemed a good idea since I thought Danielle was a bit less intimidating."
- The Ancestry.com activity has confirmed the family origins to be based in Germany, the United Kingdom, various carnivals and near Shieldsville.
- Dixean Drager -Clooney is so tired of having to show her driver's license at trendy bars and restaurants in the Twin Cities. "People insist I look younger than twenty-one" and it gets tiring when I have to haul out my identification over and over again."
- Pre-concert ticket sales for this year's Bingstock are way ahead of the original projections. "We seem to be the summer event of the season." Said Ticket Manager Gary Lazarz. "A lot of Lorrie's prison friends, ex-cons and escapees are heading to the event in hopes of hearing some music, eating red Jell-O and settling a few old scores."
