What Is With All The Weddings This Summer?

(Matrimony Central) Joanie Boysen sat on the edge of the recent Mankato nuptials, kicked off her shoes and said, "Finally, the wedding season is finished. There was once talk of Mike and me renewing our vows but I don't think I can handle one more wedding this year. How many were there, nine?" Well, she was closer than most MNL readers can attest but the MNL research department has found five separate weddings which have hit the readership this summer.

"The reason for the logjam," whispered attendee Lori Beyl, "is that everyone went this year because 2010 is going to be all Little Billy Miller (LBM)." The 2010 summer has long been predicted as the year that LBM was going to finally settle down and convince some English-speaking girl of his value as a husband. "I am burdened by my looks," sighed the fortyish but still attractive Gulf War veteran. "All too often, they are intimidated by my outer beauty and question their own worthiness. I will tell you one more thing about good-looking people, we are not well-liked."

Many insiders confirmed the looming LBM nuptials as the single reason on the wedding rush but other factors do exist which explain the '09 wedding spike. "They included," said socialite Don Smith the 'dry period of 2005-2008' where no one in the readership got married" and of course, MNL noted the still infamous "Matt Schnackenberg" incident which remains tied up in the federal courts. "This group was not going to be denied," said Don, "And I was not going to be the one to keep them away from the wonderful institution of marriage. And that it what it is, an institution, a freaking institution."

The Faribault caterers, bail bondsmen and tavern owners are awaiting the start of the new season. "LBM is a high value target and we will get him 2010," said "adult" photographer Mark Fielding, "I figure if that marriage happens, anything can."
