Buster's Burgers Opens at FIA Airport

"Any Fresher. It Would Be Downright Insulting™"

(Faribault International Airport) The lines of cars ringed the legendary and iconic gateway to the skies with hopes of being one of the lucky few to experience culinary excellence. That excellence was the grand opening of the nation's premier meat franchise of Buster's Burgers. "We got it all said Chamber of Commerce Senior

Ambassador, Gary Lazarz, "This stuff is fresh and full of old timey goodness."

Fans of Buster's Burgers also lined up for commemorative tattoos and undisclosed body piercings. "I got the third tattoo and twenty percent off my order of steer tacos," gushed (see right) Geraldine Anderson (nee Miller) "and I was told if I wore a pair of steer horns to work, I would get a free order of Busterfries™ at my next trip in."

Not all Rice County residents are pleased with the new restaurant's arrival on the North side of town. "I am not one of those PETA hotheads," said Jimmy Liverseed, "but this new place is kind of cramping my personal supply chain of beef." When asked if that was some local agricultural euphemism, Jimmy shook his head and said, "No, I was always able to get ahold of quarters of fresh beef but instead of going to a reputable butcher, I have to now rely on my semi-crazy sketchy cousins to do some selective rustling and they always want two days' notice and only deal in cash."

For the great majority of Faribault residents, Buster's Burgers had come at a perfect time with the losses of famous eateries such as Basilleo's Pizza, Wimpy's, The Curve and the venerable Lavender Inn. "It is high time we got a new place to eat." Said longtime culinary expert Judie Caron, "but when I think about it, my sister does most of my cooking so I am good either way."

Updates from Around the World

Life goes on, Things get done"

(Reykjavik) There was red faces all around after the recent retrospective of the male subscribers of Mom's Newsletter at the Icelandic Phallogological Museum. Co-sponsored by Tootsie Roll Juniors, the retrospective was reported by the Reykjavik Daily Herald to "come up short" with both content and substance." Travel Host Derek Sayres said, "I did not mind the bad press, but I was not aware that 'flaccid' actually existed in the Icelandic language. It was a tough day."

(Washington) The "Who Has The Craziest Wife" contest had to be postponed by a complete server crash due to a far higher number of responses. "There were five million attempts from Henderson, Nevada alone," said system administrator Donald "King" Smith. "The cities of St. Paul (Como area), Golden Valley and New Jersey also taxed the server sites but that tsunami from Nevada actually dimmed the lights.: Plans are to re-introduce the contest when certain people are out of the country."

James "Snapper" Batchelder

has been formally recognized as a Grumpy Old Man from the International Grumpy Old Man Institute based in Sarasota, Florida. "I am proud of the award." said Jimmy at a recent 4:00 pm dinner, "Because these kids have no respect, listen to crap music, wear stupid shoes and can't lift up their nose from their smarty computer Jetson phone to make eye contact. And they buy up all the decent hats." When challenged that everyone needs to achieve their potential, Jimmy paused and said, "Most of them are pussies and the rest just have to stay off my lawn." After reviewing his dusty vinyl collection, he put on a Wishbone Ash album and took a well-deserved nap.
